WORKWEAR

WELCOME TO THE FUTURE OF WORKWEAR

MADE HERE IN AMESBURY, MA

Visible from 495, you can see the building from which co-founders, Ted De Innocentis and Josh Walker are making their own history here in Amesbury.

Co-founded in 2016 by Ted De Innocentis and Josh Walker, 1620 Workwear is named after the year that the Pilgrims landed in Plymouth, Massachusetts. Located at 16 South Hunt Road in Amesbury, the company has quickly become a popular choice for those who work in tough and demanding industries, needing quality workwear.

Originally located in Newburyport, 1620 Workwear chose their current location in Amesbury in 2021 because of the great manufacturing building and because of the city being a good location for talent. They currently employ thirteen workers who hold positions in sales, marketing, customer service, warehouse and distribution, and sewing machine operation. They also have contract manufacturing in Everett, MA and Lawrence, MA.

The idea behind 1620 Workwear was to create workwear that would meet the needs of workers in a variety of industries, from construction and manufacturing to agriculture and forestry. The team behind the brand spent countless hours researching and testing fabrics and designs to produce workwear that was not only functional, but also comfortable and stylish. The result is a range of workwear that is tough enough to withstand the rigors of the job site, but also looks great and is comfortable to wear all day long. From rugged work pants and jackets to durable shirts and hats, 1620 Workwear has everything you need to get the job done. “The average working guy goes through 5-8 pairs of pants a year at an average price of $49. Our pants are proven to be 10X tougher than traditional cotton canvas work pants while providing you with significantly increased range of movement. Reducing fatigue and increasing safety on the job site” said, Josh Walker.

While it would be cheaper to make and import clothing overseas, 1620 chooses to manufacture here. Josh said, “We chose to make 1620 gear here because we believe that some of the best fabric is still made in America. Our sewing talent rivals that of any nation, and in the end, it’s the best way we can support our local communities. It gives us confidence that proper environmental and labor practices are in place. And if we can create livable wage jobs for friends and neighbors, that’s even better.”

1620 is much better for the environment too. By purchasing fewer pants, you are not only reducing the amount of trash that ends up in a landfill but also saving 1800+ of gallons of water that it takes to grow the cotton in one pair of traditional cotton work pants.

One of the standout products in the 1620 Workwear lineup is their Granite Work Pant. Made from a combination of cotton, polyester, and spandex, these pants are designed to be both durable and comfortable. They feature a gusseted crotch and articulated knees, which provide a full range of motion and make them ideal for tasks that require bending and stretching. The pants also have reinforced knees and a double-layered seat, which means they can withstand the wear and tear that comes with heavy use. Additionally, the pants have multiple pockets, including a unique utility pocket that is perfect for carrying a cell phone or other small items.

1620 Workwear also offers a range of tech shirts, jackets, and vests, including their Classic Work Jacket. Made from a combination of cotton and polyester, this jacket is tough enough to withstand the elements, but also looks great in any situation. The jacket has a water-repellent finish, which means it can withstand light rain and snow, and it also features a range of pockets, including a unique internal pocket that is perfect for storing a wallet or phone.

As a way of expanding services, they now offer business-to-business (b2b) production of workwear, making their line of durable 1620 products available with custom screen printed and embroidered company logos.

What sets 1620 Workwear apart from other workwear brands is their attention to detail and commitment to quality. Every product they make is designed to meet the specific needs of workers in a variety of industries, and they are constantly testing and refining their products to ensure they are the best they can be. Additionally, the company is committed to using sustainable materials and manufacturing processes, which means their products are not only good for workers, but also good for the environment.
